The visual angle ($\alpha_k$) subtended by a prey group ($k$) on the retina of a predator is determined by both the dimensions of the prey group ($r$) and the distance from predator to prey ($d_k$). The total visual angle subtended by all groups is then assumed to be positively related to the rate of finding prey (inset).